

Better Happens at Home: Alpro Champions Locally-Sourced Soybeans

As a European pioneer in plant-based foods, Alpro recognizes that being a leader means putting sustainability at the heart of everything we do. And sourcing ingredients locally helps us make big strides towards achieving our goals. Staying closer to home means we can secure more non-GMO soy beans. It means we have a shorter supply chain. And it supports and helps maintain the health of local agriculture.

Today, 50 percent of the soy used in Alpro's products come from Europe. In Belgium and in The Netherlands, we've partnered with farmers to develop a variety of soybean that is better suited to our climate. In France, Alpro has revitalized soybean cultivation, and after only five years, the entire soy needs of our French production site are met by a locally grown crop. Because better means thinking about tomorrow, Alpro is committed to growing and sourcing products in a way that helps protect our resources for the next generation.
